THE END OF THE YMR

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE:

An American spaceship, returning from Venus, crashes in the sea in Italy. An egg, brought back by the expedition, is found by a young boy, Pepe, and sold to a Dr. Leonardo. The doctor has a granddaughter, Marisa, who gets acquainted with Col. Calder, sole survivor of the rocket's crash. The egg from Venus hatches! Out of it crawls a horrid hissing little creature . . . an Ymir.

CHAPT. 5 THE MONSTER GROWS

The General grasped the edge of the desk tightly.

"It is of the greatest importance that we recover that sealed container."

"We shall need divers to descend to the wreck of the space vessel and search for the specimen."

Pepe could contain himself no longer.

"Signore—"

The General looked at him curiously.

Col. Calder saw something in the boy's face. He said:

"It is there!" He ran towards a cave across the beach. They followed him, and saw him point to the hidden cylinder.

Col. Calder grabbed the cylinder,

then threw it away in disgust. "Empty!"

"But I know where it is!" Pope sobbed. "The thing that was inside! I took it to the Professor Leonardo."

"How will we find him?" the Colonel said. "How will we know him?"

"He drives a truck with a house that follows it."

"A trailer!"

"Find it as quickly as you can," the General said.

It had been a long, hard drive.

Maria, spelling her grandfather at the wheel, drove slowly down the winding road.

"Stop for a moment, mi cara. The canvas has come loose."

"It has occurred to me," Dr. Leonardo said, "that our strange friend is perhaps a mutation. But of what species? This I cannot say. And there is always the possibility that it might be a throwback to a prehistoric and unclassified—"

Maria's scream cut into his speech. She screamed again, and he saw the three-taloned claw wrapped about her slim wrist. She jerked her arm away, and the grip was broken.

Yet still Maria screamed, rubbing her wrist in horror and backing away from the truck.

The tarpaulin was being split apart before their eyes—rended as if by tissue. The hole gaped wide, and the thing that was ripping its way through to freedom hissed in a terrible sibilant sound that sent Dr. Leonardo and his grandchild staggering away in terror.

"How big . . . how big . . ." the Doctor muttered.

Gone was the 3' creature that had been a prisoner in the zoologist's cage. The cage itself had been twisted out of shape, its metal bars torn and broken as if they had been threads of cotton. The beast loomed up in the rear of the truck fully the size of a man, twice as large as before, twice as horrifying.

Then it leaped!

Maria's shriek rebounded over the mountainside and her grandfather croaked helplessly and reached for her arm. The beast landed on its feet before them, waving its three-taloned claws menacingly in the air, the sounds erupting from its throat filled with alien terror. They backed away, slowly, clinging to each other.

"Oh, God!" Maria said. "The size of the thing—so soon—"

The beast remained frozen in its frightening attitude, as if uncertain of its next maneuver. Then, a terrifying thing, it started at them.

"No!" Dr. Leonardo cried as the creature rushed towards them. He pushed his granddaughter aside, out of its path.

But the creature wasn't bent on attack. It brushed by them, its ugly eyes fixed on some unguessable destination.

Then it was gone.

There were two jeeps approaching. Maria saw the man in the uniform, and recognized her own bandages on his arm and forehead.

"You must be Professor—"

Dr. Leonardo wouldn't wait for the formalities. He said: "There is a strange animal, Signore. We were carrying it in our truck, and it broke away."

"It fled into the woods. It has amazing strength, Colonel; the very bars of its cage were torn apart. It's dangerous—"

"Into the woods," he said. "We'll have to track the beast down on foot!"

CHAPT. 6 THE CREATURE STRIKES

The creature lunged.

The hunger was sharp in its vitals. Unsatified juices oozed into its mouth. Its three-taloned hands quivered with its need. Its eyes burned with the desire for nourishment.

It staggered thru the thick underbrush, a blind instinct taking control of its strange legs driving it forward to some unknown source of food. A food it had never tasted but a food that was necessary for its survival.

A whimpering sound baited its progress. Four-legged beasts became frightened at its approach. They bolted from beneath the large tree, their manes streaming out behind them.

From further off, a bleating noise was heard.

The creature joined the night-chorus of sounds. His breathing became heavy. He grunted and hissed in defiance and hatred of the world that was now his home, his tail swishing back and forth on the tall grass. Then he roared a challenge eons old to the universe at large, and lumbered towards the sound of bleating animals in the field. One didn't flee. A small animal, too small for wisdom, tugged at the retreating grass with his tiny mouth. A rumble came from the deep throat of the creature as he moved towards it.

Then he stopped.

His dragon's head raised in the air, as if sensing something more important than this innocent target of his wrath. He turned from the tiny animal and headed back towards the structures of the two-legged ones.

Vittorio grumbled at the pain in his back. Each day, the soil of the farmland seemed to resist his efforts more and more.

When Vittorio heard the whimpering of the horses in the barn, he became curious.

He took the coal oil lantern from the table, and went out into the night.

The creature walked into the building, its walls hung with strange objects of hide and wood and metal.

He moved further into the barn and found a sack of a powdery substance. He scooped some into his three-taloned hands and put it to his mouth. Contentedly, the creature dined on the yellowing powder.

But his meal wasn't to be peaceful.

A yapping, snarling, glowering animal was standing menacingly in the doorway. It hesitated only a moment, then sprang to engage the creature in combat. It met the challenge with a roar of hatred.

The dog's teeth tried to sink their way into the scaly throat of the thing from Venus; its claws raked the tough hide viciously. But the sharp talons and unwieldy strength of the creature soon took command. Broken and bleeding, the animal was torn from its grip and flung disdainfully in a corner of the building.

Vittorio came into the barnyard just as the awful sounds of the death-struggle were fading away.

The sight of the awesome dragon's head above him from his features in terror.

"Don't move," a voice said behind him. "Back out very slowly."

Vittorio's old body couldn't obey the command.

Thin fingers were touching Vittorio's sleeve. He backed away from the frightful sight of the creature's jaws.

"Outside," Calder said. "You, too, Dr. Uhl. We have to work this out."

The civilian scientist gaped at his first look at the thing from Venus. "Incredible!" he said.

"We'll talk about it outside," Calder repeated tensely.

When they were all out, he shut the door carefully.

"The creature must be captured alive."

Dr. Uhl went to the door of the barn, his expression awed.

Behind them, the Commissario was urging on his Carbines, who were pushing the farmer's hay wagon towards the barn door.

"Good," Calder said. He grasped the side of the wagon and shook it.

Calder said crisply, "I'm going to try to prod the creature into the wagon. If I succeed, get ready to slam the gate closed."

They opened the door and cleared a path for the Colonel to enter the barn. He held the pole lightly beneath his arm and walked slowly into the darkness.

There was moonlight on the floor of the barn and its beams cast an unearthly light on the scaly hide of the creature in hiding. It was making ugly, warning noises in its throat.

CHAPT. 7 THE YMR AT BAY

Calder stopped in front of the beast and lifted the pole into the air.

The creature snarled.

Calder reached out and prodded him slightly. A three-taloned hand slapped out and the Colonel retreated quickly. Then he shoved the pole forward again and once more the creature flailed at it.

He raised the pole again.

The creature leaped!

Calder backed away hastily, stumbled on some slippery substance on the floor of the barn. He recovered just in time to keep the pole between the infuriated thing from Venus and himself.

It moved swiftly to the right and to the left, its claws raking out in an effort to grasp the tantalizing pole.

The sounds in the creature's throat were awful to hear. It roared and grumbled and slashed out helplessly.

The steadily growing Ymir, now more than man-size, escapes from the barn despite bullets fired at its horny hide.

But slowly the pole was pushing it back to the building where the wooden prison awaited the beast.

"Now!" Calder shouted.

Dr. Uhl sprang forward to ready the gun, to slam it shut before the creature could bolt away. But his action came a second too late.

"Look out!" Calder cried.

Vittorio, crazed with fright, threw himself towards the wall of the barn. His fingers closed around the handle of a pitchfork and he waved it in defense. The creature came after him and Calder cursed at the farmer's interference.

"Put that thing down!" he barked.

The distraction was all that the beast from Venus needed. With a swoop of its strong right arm it swept the pole out of the Colonel's hand and turned to flee.

The old farmer, hate and loathing in his eyes, was raising the pitchfork high above his head, and with a shrill cry he drove it deep into the back of the creature.

The creature emitted a yell of torment, a cry of the damned. He shook his scaly body until the piercing tines of the fork were loosened, and the implement thudded to the floor of the barn.

Then his taloned bands reached out in rage and grasped Vittorio. His powerful arms closed around the old farmer and they rolled together to the ground.

Calder raised the shovel over his head and beat at the scaly figure with all the strength in his arms. Nothing seemed to injure it, but the attack diverted the creature enough to cause him to release his death-grip on the old man's throat. He snarled and whirled upon Calder. The Colonel raised the shovel again and the creature lashed out.

Calder fell; the bandage on his arm reddened with blood once more.

Then the creature turned once more to the mutilated old man on the floor and the Commissario fired.

The Commissario swore loudly. "He is the devil himself! Bullets have no effect! He cannot be killed!"

The creature left the old man and snarled defiantly at the men and their weapons. Calder had a gun in his hand now, too, and he fired point-blank at the scaly beast.

"Outside!" he shouted. "Try and lock him in the barn!"

They reached the entrance, and slammed the barn doors closed just as the creature was upon them.

"It's impossible!" Dr. Uhl said shakily. "Bullets can't kill the thing. Bob! Maybe nothing can!"

"Hold the doors!" the Commissario shouted to his officers.

The doors of the barn creaked and bulged with the creature's efforts to escape.

Then, suddenly, there was no pressure.

"Around the side!" Calder yelled. They went at a trot to the other side of the barn, in the direction of a splintering sound. The hole torn in the rotted wood was big enough to permit the escape of a creature twice the size of the beast from the far-off planet of Venus.

CHAPTER 8 "WE'LL CAPTURE HIM!"

They stood around Dr. Leonardo's trailer. The police chief turned to Col. Calder. "I do not like this thing," he said flatly.

"I don't like it much myself," the Colonel drawled. "But I don't think we have any choice in the matter. We have to hunt the creature down, no matter how long it takes."

Marius appeared at the door of the trailer. She came forward to the Colonel's side.

"Is it true about this creature? Is it true that you found it on—Venus?"

"It's true, all right."

"Venus!" Her eyes glowed. "So far away . . ."

"More than 20 million miles," Calder said. "But now I'm beginning to feel that 20 million miles isn't really

CHAPT. 10 THE HORROR & THE HELICOPTERS

Gen. McIntosh scowled at the code flooring of the Commisario di Gerri.

The Commissario stepped in front of the General. "I must tell you, General, that at daybreak, I intend to use every means at my disposal to hunt down and destroy that creature before it actually kills someone."

"You can't!"

They looked towards the doorway at the man who had spoken. Col. Calder's face was wrathful as he strode into the room, followed by Dr. Uhl.

"I've been thinking about it," Calder said eagerly. "I remembered something we found out about the creatures, by accident. We had set up power lines outside the ship, and one of the beasts got careless and tried to chew them up. They weren't high-voltage lines, but the charge was still strong enough to stun the creature into unconsciousness. That means they're extremely susceptible to electric shock. Controlled voltage can paralyze it. If we could get us two helicopters and a squad of armed paratroopers, we might be able to drop an electrically-charged wire net on the beast."

"If it can be done—before human life is threatened—and the Italian Government has no objection."

McIntosh touched his arm. "You'll have your 'copters first thing in the morning . . ."

The giant whirlybird hung like some peculiar insect about in the air.

The crew chief ducked beneath the upraised fuselage and beckoned for his men to follow.

Col. Calder and Dr. Uhl watched in suspense as the pilot reached his arm over the side of the cabin, tugging at the releasing wire. The net was freed of its fastening and plummeted to the ground.

"Right on target!" the crew chief grunted. "The hook's working fine, sir."

"No," Calder said. "We'll just have to pray the net doesn't jam when we're over our target."

Calder headed for the second helicopter warming up on the airstrip. Even as Col. Calder's helicopters were readying for the takeoff, the Commissario and his Carabinieri were already on the track of the beast.

The men walked swiftly, heading for a pile of flat rocks ahead, the panting police dogs straining at their leashes by their sides.

The Commissario stepped forward to survey the countryside. Something moved and he set his binoculars fall to his chest.

"Terror By the river!"

Now they were in full sight of the beast, rearing on its sprawling legs to stare at them in surprise and anger at being disturbed. The creature bellowed at the barking dogs streaming towards it. Then it turned and made for a high melon.

"He escapes!"

so far. When we go back—"

She was shaking her head sadly.

"I don't think much of your dream, Colonel. It's like a crazy thirst that can't be quenched. What can such trips bring you? More death? More creatures like that—"

"Oh, go out and kill your poor beast. Show it how well we behave on our planet. Shoot it with your guns—destroy it with your bombs—"

"Listen," Calder told her, "I'm the last guy in the world that wants to kill the poor thing. It was harmless on its own world."

Suddenly Dr. Uhl appeared in the doorway, his hand clutching the notebook taken from the dead Dr. Sharman.

"Look—he wrote that the basic diet of the creatures is raw sulfur!"

Dr. Leonard stepped forward. "There are rich sulfur beds in Sicily. Not far from here. At the base of Mount Etna."

Calder's fist struck his palm with enthusiasm. "Of course! We'll scour that mountain area in the morning! If the creature's there—we'll capture him!"

A new voice came from the doorway. They looked at the stony face of the Commissario of Police. "There will be no further attempts to capture that monster alive."

Calder followed the police chief outside and saw the Commissario already entering the jeep. The vehicle started down the road.

The second jeep was quickly occupied by another of the Sicilian policemen, and Calder, his face livid, jumped to stop him from turning the key in the ignition. "You got a passenger, pal!"

CHAPT. 9 THE DRAGON IN THE FOREST

Theresa slammed the dish in front of her husband and Ignacio regarded the food with eyes shaped by wine. "Not hungry."

He poured himself another tumblerful of wine. It was the final straw for Theresa.

"Out, pig!" she cried. "Out with the other wild beasts!"

Ignacio yawned and moved off down the road, heading for more wine.

After a while, the long walk began to tire him. He sat down on a rock. He closed his eyes.

The sound that awoke him was a growl.

Ignacio turned his head swiftly this way and that, until he saw the thing moving among the trees.

The thing in the woods came closer and its unbelievably hideous face peered from the underbrush and stared at him.

The thing's jaws parted and the sound that came from its seedy throat made Ignacio shrink in terror. He leaped into the air and turned his back on the creature.

He reached the doorway of his cabin in a fifth of the time he had taken to reach the rock in the road.

"What is it?" his wife cried.

"A beast—a thing—a demon—" Ignacio gasped.

"You are crazy. Crazy with drink!"

"I swear to you! A dragon! Fury fest high! Breathing flames! I saw it with my own eyes!"

She snorted, and continued to eat.

"No!" The incline is too steep—he is caught!"

The beast's predicament encouraged them. One after another, the Carabinieri drew their pistols and began to fire at the monster.

"We've got him!" Enrico cried joyfully.

But even as the words came from his mouth, they saw the creature rear back and make a mighty spring towards the crest of the incline. For a moment, its foot slipped on the loose shale, then its taloned hands dug into the rock and held firm. Another second and it was atop the incline, belching defiantly at its pursuers.

"After it!" the Commissario yelled. "Don't let it escape!"

They made an assault upon the steep side of the incline. When they came to the top, the creature turned upon them with a snarl.

The men with the incendiary weapons came hastily to take the front position. A whoosh of flame burst from the nozzles, aimed directly at the beast. Tips of fire reached it, and the creature screamed in agony and turned to flee.

White clouds were pouring from the flaming bush, forming a smoke-screen between the men and the creature.

"Back! Back!" the Commissario ordered, gathering his forces away from the windward side of the smoke and flames. Angry, he hefted his binoculars to his eyes but his eyes found nothing.

"We have lost him," he said bitterly. "Now we must separate, so that we can cover more territory. The beast must be found!"

The helicopter dipped low and Col. Calder peered over the side.

Then the Colonel spotted something in the distance.

They could see the creature raising its awesome head, now larger than before, at the sound of the approaching motors.

They saw the second helicopter appearing to the left, its steel-wired net hanging beneath the fuselage. The creature saw it, too, and turned and headed for the shadows of a large rock.

They guided the craft towards the cowering beast and Calder reached behind him for a sulfur sack. He sent the sack plummeting towards the ground.

The creature was emerging from its hiding place, its nostrils sniffing the good smell of the raw sulfur.

The creature, sorely tempted by the food it craved, was heading cautiously towards the sulfurous sulfur. Then its taloned hand was scooping it up, stuffing it between its dragon-like jaws, filling its ravenous stomach.

Overhead, they saw the second helicopter sway directly over the creature, and the steel-wired net fell free of the undercarriage.

They heard the beast's scream of rage as the weight of the net knocked it to the ground. It began straggling for freedom at once, its talons ripping at the steel threads, its feet lashing out furiously.

The Giant Ymir stalks its prey—and people start to pray!

The soldiers hurried towards the edges of the net, and tried to prevent the beast from thrashing its way free. Quickly, they tried to drive the net into the ground with spikes, but the creature's wild movements made it impossible.

One of the men with the generator cams running towards the net, dragging an electric cable. The other poised at the switch, waiting for the Colonel's signal.

The contact was made. The Colonel yelled, "Hit it!"

With a horrendous shriek, and a violent upheaval of its body, the creature reacted to the electrical charge coursing thru the steel wires of the imprisoning net.

The creature thrashed once more, and lay still.

Calder said: "Cut the switch." When it was done, he walked slowly towards the vast, ungainly hulk of the unconscious beast.

"Thank God," he said softly. "Now we can find out. Now we can learn how . . ."

Over the rise, dusty figures appeared and surrounded the scene. The police chief walked towards them slowly. He looked down mournfully at the monstrous prisoner under the net.

"Only the devil could create such a monster, Colonel. What good is a world where others of this kind breed?"

"What good was this world," Calder said grudgingly, "when the dinosaurs roamed Sicily? You're being superstitious. I thought you were a sensible man."

CHAPTER 11 THE BEAST OF VENUS

There was excitement in the air of Rome.

The center of the excitement was an impressive building which bore the seal of the great United States of America.

In the Embassy anteroom, a crowd of buzzing newsmen stood around impatiently.

The inner door suddenly opened, and they pushed eagerly towards the door.

After a moment, when the room was silent, the General addressed the gathering.

"As you are all probably aware, there was an air crash 10 days ago off the coast of Sicily. The aircraft XY-21 which crashed into the Mediterranean Sea on the 11th, was a single-stage Astral-propelled rocket launched 13 months ago from a site within the United States.

The expedition was successful.

"There were specimens brought back. In the crash of the spaceship, all but one specimen was lost. That one, fortunately, was the most valuable, because it represented the embryo of a Venusian creature.

"That is the creature you have been hearing rumors about.

"I'm going to ask you correspondents to select 3 of your number to accompany Col. Calder to the zoo tomorrow morning."

The newsmen needed no further signal. Excitedly, they scurried, jumped and ran to the telephones or the exit doors.

Calder saw Dr. Leonardo. Marisa stuck out her hand.

"Dr. Uhl arranged this permission for us," Dr. Leonardo said.

Calder's eyes were on the girl. "How are you?"

"I'm all right. I—heard about the capture of the creature. It must have been frightening—"

"The worst is over," Calder said. "The beast is nice and tame now. We've taken all the fight out of him."

"Colonel Calder!" Dr. Leonardo touched his arm. "I have been assisting with the beast, as you know. But I am accustomed to having the help of my granddaughter."

Calder grinned. "Sure, Marisa's help will be appreciated."

CHAPT. 12 SOMETHING NEW IN THE ZOO

It wasn't a long drive to the Rome zoo.

They went around the elephant cage to a door cut in the side of an enormous cement structure.

The sound of slow, labored moaning was constant in the large room they found themselves in. The correspondents didn't remark upon the sound until they saw its source.

"Holy jumping—"

"Incredible!"

"A nightmare!"

It was Miss Reynolds who was first able to overcome her awe and speak: "The—the site of the thing! It must weigh a ton!"

Calder spread his hands. "And only days ago, the creature was only this tall. Our scientists believe the Earth's atmosphere has upset its metabolic rate. The more it breathes the bigger it gets. Now if you'll all come this way—"

The creature's labored breathing became louder as they moved towards the head of the beast. They saw Dr. Leonardo and his granddaughter, standing hard by its frightening jaws.

"They're feeding the creature," Calder said in hushed tones.

Miss Reynolds' businesslike air was vanishing as she realized their proximity to the very head of the creature on the table. Her face was showing feminine horror.

Calder said: "Now if you'll come with me, Dr. Uhl is expecting us."

The correspondents followed the Colonel towards the main control board.

The Englishman said: "Doctor—there's a rumor that gunfire has no effect on the beast. Why is that?"

"Because the creature has no heart or lungs. Instead it has a network of small tubes throughout its body. Hence small arms effect no damage. However, anything larger—canons, baracca fire, that would finish him."

"Then he's hostile," Miss Reynolds said. "We'll have to fight him for his planet."

"No!" Calder said sharply. "We encountered no hostility from the creatures on their home world. It was only when the beast was transplanted, tortured, starved—that's when the trouble started."

CHAPT. 13 DISASTER

There was a sudden signal from the platform.

"Look out!"

A terrified voice called up from below as the chain, with gathering momentum, swung the equipment off its course, towards a network of dangling wires.

"The cables! Look out for the cables!"

Sparks flew from the short-circuited wires in a fiery shower. The voltmeter swung down from 1800 to zero and the board began to smoke.

With a crash the creature's hand landed on the platform, knocking one of the technicians off his feet.

"Look!"

They turned to the creature again. Its head began a slight roll from side to side and a deeper groan escaped its jaws. Its tail began a slow gyration. It struggled to sit up and found its self bound. It strained furiously against the metal that held it prisoner. It roared in protest and increased its exertion until the metal began to crack.

They were all out of the doorway by the time the last chain was thrown from the creature's body and it was raising itself defiantly to its full and terrifying height.

Calder slammed the door of the elephant house shut. In its cage the elephant trumpeted with uneasy excitement.

The Colonel spotted a zoo-keeper. "Yoo!" he said curtly. "Get that elephant out of its cage and away from here!"

"The thing's trying to get out," Dr. Uhl said breathlessly. "He's grown stronger—I don't know if the cement will hold."

They moved back as the cracks widened.

Then the creature burst thru!

CHAPT. 14 BATTLE TO THE DEATH

For a moment, the thing from Venus stood framed within the ragged opening. The elephant on the path started at the appearance of the thing, lifted its trunk nervously and bleated in fright. The pachyderm raised its massive forefoot in the air. The pale fell out of the keeper's hand. He reached down to retrieve it, just as the creature attacked.

Trumpeting first in fear, and then in responsive fury, the mammoth reared to meet the charge of the alien beast. The crowd broke and scattered, and then returned in a wide, awed circle to watch the struggle between the gigantic animals.

The Ymir, undaunted by the first counterattack of the elephant, sprung again with renewed savagery. It bulldozed its way towards the gray animal, ignoring its sharp tusks.

A news photographer hurried closer with his camera poised.

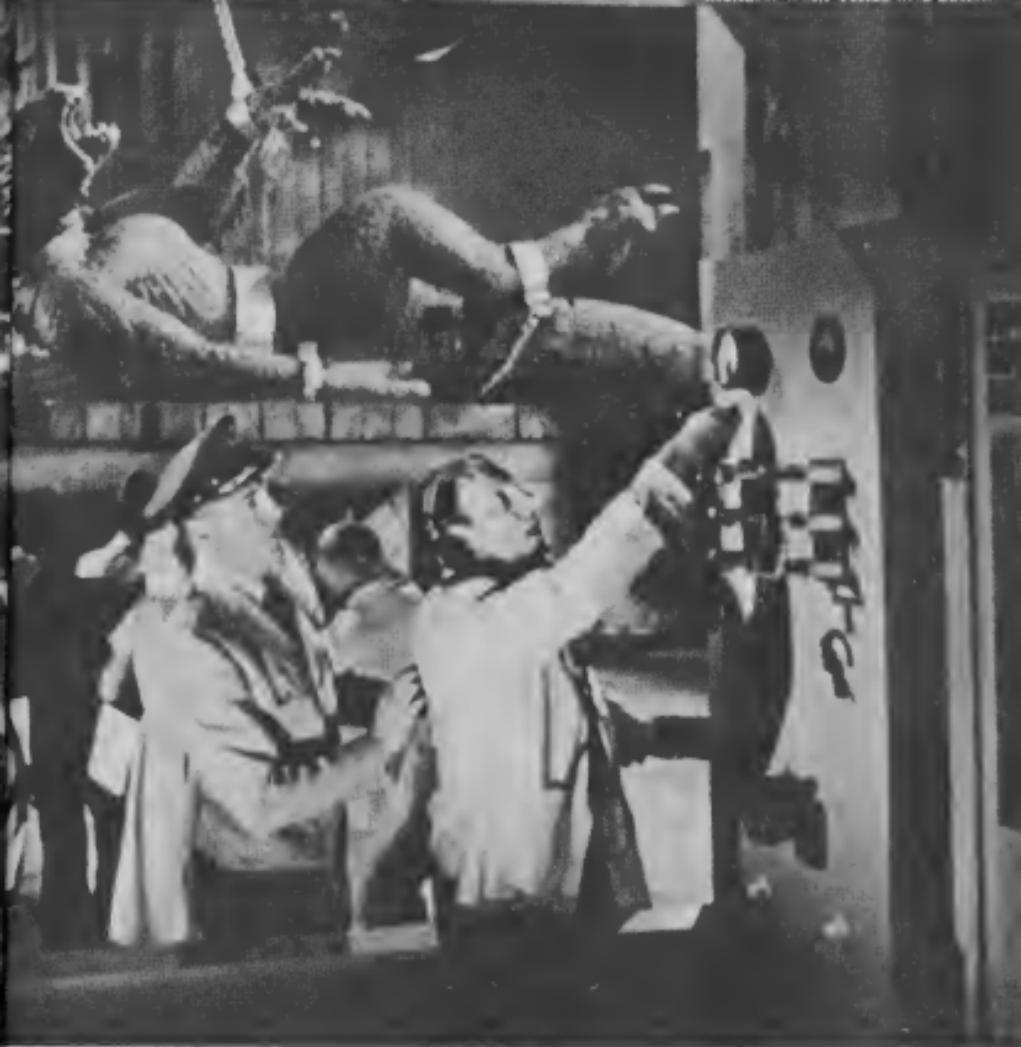

With a roar, the creature tore at the throat of the elephant with its taloned hands, and the violence of its attack sent the gray mammoth off its feet.

"Look out!" the crowd shrieked. But it was too late to warn the two men close to the scene of the battle. The elephant's massive body thudded heavily to the ground, pinning cameraman and zoo-keeper beneath tons of flesh and bone.

The elephant was back on its feet now, edging away from the snarling creature that had come from space to do it battle. The Ymir moved after it and the combatants headed into the streets, their animal cries resounding thru the quiet avenues.

Now there were horrible gashes torn in the side of the elephant, blood pouring freely from the wounds inflicted by the creature's raking teeth and talons. Still the mammoth fought on. It fought as the mastodon ancestors might have for savage Tyrannosaurus Rex of the Earth's dawn.

Then, with a monstrous shriek, the creature closed in for the kill. It drove straight for the elephant's throat, its fangs sinking deeply into the leathery flesh.

Gen. McIntosh's face paled as he listened to the excited voice on the telephone. "Right away, Bob," he said. "I'll get down there as soon as I've ordered out the troops. Stay with the beast and get reports to me if you can."

To Contino he said: "The creature is loose and on the rampage! If the beast isn't stopped, it'll kill hundreds—maybe thousands."

In a last brave effort, the elephant tried to shake the jaws of the creature loose from its bleeding throat. But the more it struggled the more deeply the fangs penetrated. Fatally wounded, it trumpeted a last note of defiance, shuddered and lay still.

Calder spotted a deserted staff car and jumped behind the wheel. He drove towards the dying elephant as the Ymir lumbered off after the mob.

and women running purposelessly, wild-eyed, some not even aware of what terror they were fleeing.

At last, Calder saw the creature. It was against a building, roaring at the dispersing throng. Its arm lashed out and its taloned hand closed around a nearby street lamp. The lamp buckled and glass showered into the gutter. Its enormous tail swished menacingly and then its other hand reached down to grasp one of the running figures in the street.

"No!" Calder shouted, stricken at the sight. He wanted to look away but his eyes were held unwillingly by the spectacle. The woman in the creature's grip let out an unholy cry and then the scream was squelched in her throat as the creature's fingers tightened about her.

The beast dropped the broken body to the ground and roared out to the world again.

A thought exploded in Col. Calder's mind and he started into action before his mind could consider the dangers. He shoved his foot down, driving the car head-on towards the lumbering beast.

The creature saw the attack but too late to avoid it. The car bludgeoned into the beast's body, sending it toppling against the stones of the building. Calder dove out the door and ran for protection.

Furiously the Ymir tried to regain its footing. He charged at the automobile that was pinning him against the building, and tipped it over on its side with a growl of rage.

Calder watched its progress from a doorway. When the creature disappeared around a corner, he left his concealment and followed.

Just as he came to the corner he heard the splashing of water and realized the beast had flung itself into the Tiber River that flowed thru the city. He hurried to the wall and peered over, looking for signs of the escaping animal. He saw nothing but the smooth surface of the water.

A soldier laughed suddenly. His companion looked at him as if he had gone mad.

"What is so funny?"

"This bombing of the water. What good do they think this can do? It's a game. They say there is some kind of demon swimming in the river. A thing from the sky. It seems like a waste of good powder."

"Throw your grenade. Leave the orders to the commander. If they wish us to bomb the Tiber, we bomb it. That is the Army."

The soldier shrugged. He took a grenade from his belt, yanked out the pin with his teeth, and then threw it casually into the water. "Here, my monster friend. A little plum to chew on."

He ducked just in time to avoid a burst of water in his face. Then he stood up and looked over the edge.

Out of the river, the water shining on its scaly hide, rose something out of a nightmare, a demon from the seas of medieval history.

"The beast!" The soldier fired 5 shots into the ugly head without effect. Then the beast, with a roar, ducked beneath the bridge and disappeared.

The soldiers reached for the weapons and ran to the other side of the bridge. But the creature was no longer to be seen. Another soldier, carrying a walkie-talkie, came running in their direction. They shouted at him.

"The monster! We have found the monster beneath the bridge. He is a devil!"

Just as the soldier put the walkie-talkie to his mouth, they heard the cracking sound beneath their feet. They stared in disbelief as very concrete of the bridge split and widened and snapped, the ground rising into the air. The men toppled off their feet as the head of the creature from outer space appeared over the wall. Wildly they fired their guns into the gleaming eyes as the center section of the bridge broke apart. The man with the walkie-talkie shouted desperately into the mouthpiece.

Again the monster's great bulk heaved against the concrete and 2 of the Italian infantrymen were flung into the water.

Racing to the scene, Col. Calder, the General and Signore Contino listened grimly to the frantic message crackling from the car radio. "Destruction— the voice was saying. "Indescribable destruction at Ponte St. Angelo!"

"Faster!" Calder ordered the driver.

When the car stopped, they looked out the windshield with palmed eyes. "Terrific," Contino whispered, looking at the demolished bridge and the row of dead bodies.

They scrambled out of the vehicle and Calder headed for the soldiers at the bridge. One of them handed him a walkie-talkie and said: "There is still one alive on the bridge. The man who broadcast to us." Calder grabbed the instrument.

"Hello! This is Colonel Calder, U.S. Where is the creature now?"

The voice croaked back. "It has left the water. It is heading towards the Coliseum area."

CHAPTER 16 TRAPPED?

The ancient Romans, who had erected the Temple of Saturn in tribute to their Gods, never knew what unworldly blasphemy would invade its columns. Time had done enough damage to the structure, and it seemed as if the creature from an alien world had come to complete the task.

In the rubble surrounding the great ruins, Italian infantrymen moved in swiftly, trying for a shot at the creature's brain as it moved behind the columns. From the street, a tank appeared, carrying a flame-thrower on its surface.

The shoot of the flame-thrower turned. The creature looked its way, as if recalling the episode on the mountain-top, and roared out in warning.

wryly. "We've had the thing trapped a dozen times."

They drove thru the streets until the vast bowl of the ancient Roman amphitheatre came into view.

"There it is!"

They had arrived just in time to see the creature from Venus, its back to the concrete walls of the stadium, hiss and growl at its tormentors. Then it turned its back to them and attempted to scale the structure in an effort to escape.

"He's getting away again," Meltnish said. "The thing's got a charmed life!"

"Maybe his luck's run out," Calder said. "Let's go."

They climbed out of the car and an Italian Captain came to greet them. "It has climbed inside the Coliseum. General My man could not prevent it."

"Just as well," Meltnish said. "If he's in there, we'll see that he doesn't get away. Let's get troops and tanks completely around the stadium, not more than a few yards apart. We'don't want any mistakes this time. And Captain, with your permission, I'd like Col. Calder here to take charge of your troops. He's had a lot of experience with the creature."

Calder said, "Let's get those men with the bazookas inside. Get them in positions all around the arena. Remember—tell them to scatter!"

Calder looked up anxiously at the sky. The daylight was almost gone and he knew night was on the side of the creature.

A roar came from the north side of the arena. Calder turned swiftly in the direction of the sound. From the seas, at a high vantage point some 50 yards from the Colonel, a bazooka launched a missile in the same direction. Masonry exploded and the creature roared out again in frustrated madness.

The soldiers began moving cautiously forward, heading for the site where the creature had been fired on.

"Watch out!" someone shouted as the thing came into view. It hissed and growled and seemed larger than ever.

"Keep moving in," Calder said. "He's got no place to go . . . keep moving forward."

But the beast was defiant still. With an ugly spreading of its jaws, it reached its taloned hands down and picked up a huge boulder of masonry. It lifted the object high over its head, and then hurled the massive debris at the oncoming soldiers. One was knocked flat by the impact, his bazooka flying from his hand. Quickly, Calder leaped to grab the fallen weapon.

Now they were marching forward inexorably, and the beast, with its back to the high wall, roared at them all the louder, its claws raking the air, like some fearsome gladiator.

Calder lifted the bazooka to his shoulder. He took his time about sighting, and then fired.

The shot struck the creature's shoulder, and it spun about, screaming. Then it moved backwards again, until its only hide was against the Colosseum (continued on page 84)

"Fire now!"

The flames spat forth, making the beast cry out in agony and rage. Its huge tail lashed out and thundered against the weak stone monument. Its great body belled its way to the other end of the edifice. Columns crumpled under its attack and more rubble crashed into the street, showering the infantrymen, raining crushing death at their heads.

With a final roar, the creature left the Temple of Saturn, and lumbered off to seek a more solid hiding place.

In the staff car, Col. Calder said: "In the Colosseum. If we can get it trapped in there—"

"Trapped," the General repeated.

WHITE ZOMBIE

when Dracula switched from red blood to white souls

"a staggering story"

Black sorcery in Haiti, island of unnatural hatreds & voodoo practices.

I saw the picture in 1932, when I was 16 years old.

Even as filmmonster fans do today, I cut clippings about it out of the papers, saved them, and now I can share them with you.

Everywhere in the USA & abroad today are new fans of fantastic films and I know that you too are saving information for the future. In the year 2000 some among you will have filmmonster scrapbooks to show your grandchildren . . . and to help editors of the 21st Century report on the 20th Century's treasure trove of terror tales of the screen.

An eerie, spooky motion picture treads the clipping which for sheer mystery outdoes all its predecessors is WHITE ZOMBIE.

This picture may safely be said to be in a class by itself. For it deals with a subject which has been little short of superstition, and a not very well known one at that. Its story deals with occult practices in remote sections of Haiti where Zombies, or dead bodies, are dug from their graves and, by a process of sorcery, re-animated and put to work in the fields & mills as slaves.

The story is staggering.

The piercing eyes & unforgettable face of Bela Lugosi as the Zombie master.

"believe it or not"

Whether or not you believe what you see in this picture, you will be enthralled by its presentation. Particularly when you learn that there is a wealth of evidence to bear out its authenticity. The entire picture is done with such artistry and with such conviction & sincerity that one cannot but believe its substance.

Certainly WHITE ZOMBIE exerts the greatest appeal upon the emotions of any recent motion picture. And this appeal is infinitely heightened by the strain the story puts upon credibility. But when one recalls that several eminent American writers have recently borne out the existence of these undead creatures (in particular Wm. Seabrook with his book "The Magic Island") one is staggered by this fantastic exposition.

"unimaginably sinister"

Bela Lugosi, creator of DRACULA, carries the main burden of WHITE ZOMBIE and no more sinister character portrayal can be imagined. Lugosi is far & away the leading exponent of this type of role and he surpasses himself here.

the eerie story

Madeline Short (Madge Bellamy) arrives in Haiti to marry Nell Parker (John Harron), her fiance. On the ship she had met Charles Beaumont (an astounding coincidence for a famous fantasy writer of the same name came to fame about a quarter of a century later!) and he (Robt. Frazer) invited Madeline & her husband-to-be to be married in his palatial home. Upon their arrival at the plantation Madeline & Nell learn there was an ulterior motive in Beaumont's invitation.

black heart

Ignoring the marriage plans, Beaumont tries to win Madeline's love, and when he fails he lays plans to forestall the wedding. He calls on a man nicknamed "Murder" Legendre, a sinister necromancer, and obtains from him a deadly drug, one pinpoint of which robs whoever swallows it of his or her intelligence—and all 5 senses!

Legendre is the leader of the Zombies—those dead bodies stolen from the graveyard and, thru a process of sorcery known to the natives, placed in a state of suspended animation and put to work in the cane fields & sugar mills. Legendre has scores of these semi-living slaves at work and is always accompanied by a bodyguard of 9 of them.

"The most sinister group of once-human beings ever assembled!"

the deadly rose

Under the guise of friendship, Beaumont gives Madeline a rose as a parting wedding gift.

But death lies within the flower's fragile petals

One of the white zombies obeys the command of Bela to grip the offender in a deadly stranglehold.

for Beaumont has placed inside the rose a pinpoint of the lethal potion.

When Madeline lifts the treacherous gift to her nose it is not long before she is felled by its fatal action.

Before the grief-stricken eyes of her husband she is pronounced dead.

premature burial

Madeline goes to an early grave.
But not for long!

Legende commands his Zombie bodyguard to go to Madeline's burial place and remove her body. She is brought to Legende's mountain castle and there is brought back to—life? It is a kind of half-life, a life in death, in which she is able to walk, eat & perform the simplest duties. But she has less mental animation than a sleep-walker and is under the constant domination of the damnable necromancer.

At first Beaumont is happy to have Madeline as his own but after a few weeks of exposure to her lifeless expression he realizes the horror of the crime he instigated. "What good is her lifeless shell?" he asks Legende. "Bring her back to life—please!"

But the scheming Legende has other plans and secretly puts some of the poison in Beaumont's wine so that soon he too is a slave to the sorcerer.

grave events

Meanwhile, Madeline's husband Neil has discovered that her grave is empty and he confides in Dr. Bruner (Jos. Cauthorn). The good doctor is an American missionary who has been in Haiti for 30 years and is familiar with the island's black sorcery practices.

The two suspect foul play and with the aid of an old native witch doctor journey to the castle in search of Madeline.

Legendre discovers their presence. An evil & him, death in their stare, he attempts to escape but stumbles & falls to the ground.

The mindless creatures continue in their appointed path and one by one walk right over the brink of the cliff! Their broken bodies can now no longer function, even in a Zombie state.

last hours of the master

Dr. Bruner creeps up on Legendre and strikes him a powerful blow on the head with an iron bar.

Legendre falls to the ground in a state of unconsciousness. At which an amazing thing happens: Madeline's mind reacts as tho a cloud be-ironic plan forms in his black unholy brain. He summons Madeline to him and commands her to look deep into his eyes. With his penetrating gaze & hypnotic hands he places her in a trance and sends her forth to kill her husband.

But Dr. Bruner prevents the murder. When Legendre discovers his subtle plan has been thwarted he takes direct action and orders his Zombie bodyguards to kill Neil.

the brink of death

The nerveless unnerving nine start out after Neil. When they find him, he is standing at the edge of a ledge. As they inexorably approach fore it had partially dissolved and she is halfway her old self again.

But then! Legendre recovers . . . and once more Madeline slips back into her half-life state, a—White Zombie.

But Beaumont's mind & will were stronger than Madeline's and during the time when Legendre's mental power no longer dominated him he roused himself from his lethargy and sought out the man who enslaved his body.

Beaumont confronts Legendre at the edge of a cliff. He grapples with him. They both hurtle over the mountainside to well-deserved deaths on the hard rocks below.

And Madeline recovers from her bondage in limbo as a . . . White Zombie.

FAIRYTALE MONSTERS OF FILMLAND

CURSE OF THE DEMON

like a fireball in the night,
a fiendish demon strikes!

Supernatural horrors... hurled against the man & woman who dared to doubt!

Terrifying adventure... as a demon from the Dark Ages is pitted against a man of science in a war of two worlds (the real & the unreal).

Medieval black magic... vs. the 20th Century's own brand of anti-witchcraft weaponry.

From hell it came... a monster materializing on the screen before your fear-fraught eyes.

"You will come to scoff and stay to shudder... as a modern scientist & a beautiful girl fight—" a thing that burns in the night.

"Skeptical? Don't make up your mind till you see this masterpiece of the macabre."

"Most terrifying story the screen has ever told."

These were some of the bold declarations made about CURSE OF THE DEMON when it burst upon the screen in 1958 like a thunderball.

If it wasn't absolutely the most terrifying story ever seen on the screen, it was indeed a masterpiece of the macabre. As a matter of editorial policy this magazine rarely passes judgment on a picture, only "presenting the facts", but in this case the facts added up to such a worthwhile & memorable monster movie that the editor breaks with tradition.

It was a "sleeper" where no one slept, deserving of the highest praise.

It was in its year that THE UNINVITED, DEAD OF NIGHT, THE HAUNTING, VILLAGE OF THE DAMNED, THE INNOCENTS and BURN, WITCH, BURN! were in their years.

horror, please, james

It all began with a short story by M. R. James called "Casting the Runes". (Interested readers may find it in his Collected Ghost Stories.) A paragraph from the story served almost as the opening of the picture:

"Inquest?" said one of the ladies. "What has happened to him?"

"Why, what happened was that John Harrington fell out of a tree and broke his neck. But the puzzle was, what could have induced him to get up there. It was a mysterious business, I must say. Here was this man—not an athletic fellow, you see he'd and with no eccentric twist about him that was ever noticed—walking home along a country road late in the evening—no tramps about—well known and liked in the place—and he suddenly begins to run like mad, loses his hat and stick, and finally shins up a tree—quite a difficult tree: a dead branch gives way, and he comes down with it and breaks his neck, and there he's found next morning with the most dreadful face of fear on him that could be imagined. It was pretty evident, of course, that he had been chased by something, and people talked of savage dogs and beasts escaped out of menageries; but there was nothing to be made of that."

face of fear, face of fire

CURSE OF THE DEMON started at a high point where most monster pictures reach their climax. Rather than waiting half a dozen reels to first see the monster, the monster was seen first thing!

Already, in the opening moments, the fantastic huge fireball of a demonic face (pictured in all its fury on our cover) was chasing a wildly fleeing figure.

Dana Andrews, most recently seen in CRACK IN THE WORLD, played John Holden, American psychologist who flew to England to help a professor expose the so-called psychic powers of an occultist.

Upon his arrival, Holden is shocked to learn that the doctor he came to aid has been fiercely attacked by some unknown assailant—some one or some thing. As a result of the brutal mauling, the doctor dies.

Holden opens his mind to strange phenomena as he delves deeper & deeper into the occult, becoming involved in all sorts of weird witchery including black magic, seances, hypnotism and hallucinations. Or are they hallucinations?

the devil doctor

Holden meets up with Dr. Karswell (Niall MacGinnis), the man he came to investigate, perhaps to reveal as a charlatan & fraud, only to be forced to the reluctant conclusion that the man with the satanic beard may indeed be the master of supernatural forces. Bit by bit Holden is enmeshed in a web of the supernatural.

Unnoticed, a parchment with runic writings is passed to Holden. When the cryptic symbols are deciphered they are discovered to be a warning of death!

Karswell the modern warlock trips & falls while fleeing from the demon conjured up by his evil magic.

John Holden (Dana Andrews) hypnotizes subject in great 82-minute-long Columbia horror classic of 1957.

According to the message, Holden has only 4 days to live!

Holden's friend, Prof. Harrington (Maurice Denham) had purportedly died because he defied a devil cult headed by Dr. Karswell.

If there is any doubt in the mind of Holden about Dr. Karswell's unholy alliance with the powers of darkness, there is none in the audience's. The scene where the unseen winds suddenly rise to hurricane proportions in a secluded spot which moments before had been the picture of peace & quiet, this dramatically emphasized Karswell's relationship with the mysterious forces of the metaphysical.

death & the demon

Holden is openly skeptical at first, scoffing at the prediction of his death, but gradually alters his viewpoint as strange, frightening incidents occur, incidents which his orthodox science are unable to explain.

The strain mounts to a terrific tension as the hour of Holden's predicted doom approaches.

In the meantime, Holden has met and become interested in Joanna Harrington (Peggy Cummins), daughter of the deceased professor, who urges him onward in his investigations. It is due to her influence that he learns at the last moment that in order to save his life he must secretly return the parchment to the one who gave it to him. Naturally, the donor would not knowingly accept it back, thus sealing his own doom.

With only minutes to go before the fulfillment of the grisly prophecy forecasting his death in a ferocious & unpleasant fashion, Holden succeeds in effecting the transfer of the diabolic parchment to the equally diabolical Dr. Karswell.

In a hair-raising climax, the fire-monster from Hell pursues Karswell who falls under the wheels of an onrushing train and is crushed to death.

Jacques Tourneur directed the unforgettable, excellent CAT PEOPLE. CURSE OF THE DEMON, known in England as NIGHT OF THE DEMON, is another triumph, well worth seeing any time revived in a movie or on TV. As fate would have it, I found myself talking on the phone with Mr. Tourneur a few days before writing this review. He told he hopes to film KALEIDOSCOPE by Ray Bradbury and WAR OF THE WITCHES, his own idea. He told me that he did not care for introduction of the fire-demon into the plot of CURSE OF THE DEMON, that he felt it weakened the effect of the picture; but I emphatically disagree!

INVASION OF THE SAUCER- MEN

This was one of America-International's earliest monster movies. Running 70 minutes, it was based on the short story "The Cosmic Frame" by Paul W. Fairman. It was first shown in 1957. Comic relief was Lyn Osborner, one of the stars of the original TV Space Patrol, who died around the time of release of the picture.

the scary story

Flashes of lightning pierce the night like skeletal fingers. Thunder peals. A voice says: "Scary, huh?"

And Lyn Osborne, as Art Burns, begins to tell how he & his business partner Joe Gruen (Frank Gorshin) are casing the town of Hicksville to figure out how they can make a fast buck.

Art & Joe have a bit of an argument and Joe goes for a walk in a huff. This proves to be a bit difficult so he goes for a walk in a wood instead.

Suddenly Joe hears a strange sound & sees a flash of light. Peering cautiously thru some bushes he sees a flying saucer landing!

He runs back to the boarding house and wakes up Art. "The thing was all covered with green light!" he babbles. "And it went aaaaaa!"

To which Art replies, "You're n-n-nuts!" and goes back to sleep.

the thing on the road

About this time a pair of young lovers, Johnny Carter (Steve Terrell) & Jean Hayden (Gloria Castillo), are driving home thru the woods. They have to pass thru some property that belongs to a cantankerous old codger who hates teenagers and is always threatening to fill them full of buckshot so they douse their lights in order to avoid a blast from the old buzzard.

Suddenly someone—or some thing—runs in front of the car. It is human in shape but too small to be a man. Nor is it a child. It seems like a dwarf with a bulbous head 4 or 5 times too big. The car cannot avoid colliding with the creature and there is a sickening crunch.

"Let me tell you shriek-heart," the Martian aka Gloria Castillo.

The hydrocephalic horror from the planet MARS!

Horrified, John & Jean jump out to see what it is they have hit. Jean begins screaming uncontrollably as they discover it to be a hideous malformed green thing like nothing they have ever seen on Earth!

the hand of horror

"We've got to inform the police!" says John as they stumble back into the car. But, unseen by them, the hand of the dead thing disconnects itself from the arm, an eye opens on it and it commences to crawl toward the auto. When it reaches the front tire, hypodermic-like needles spring from its fingers like a switchblade knife and it punctures the tire.

The pair has to set out in the dark on foot. After them crawls the seeing eye hand!

Meanwhile Joe, who is once again prowling around in the night, comes across the car & the corpse. He immediately sees the commercial possibilities in this "man from Mars" and rushes to a phone and wakes up Art. Half asleep & under the influence of Joe's enthusiasm, Art finds himself cleaning out the refrigerator to make room to preserve a dead space-man. Then—boing!—

One of the 4 "Martian" actors shows the big head he got for working in the pictures.

Gloria & "Saucer-man" shake hands at successful conclusion of pictures-making.

he suddenly wakes up and says, "What am I doing?" and disgustedly goes back to bed, snorting "Space-meal!"

When Joe gets back to the car a couple of the space-creature's companions are there and, thinking Joe killed their comrade, they attack him with their hypodermic needle-fingers. What they jab him with is not poison but—alcohol! Ordinarily, this would not be fatal but Joe is already in a pickled condition and this superdose finishes him off.

another death

Johnny & Jean are luffed off by the police as pranksters. But the army is attracted to the site of the saucer landing and there some soldiers try to communicate with the object, thinking its owners are inside. Deciding at last it's empty, the engineer corps goes to work with blow-torches, trying to cut thru the alien metal. One of the torches ignites a concealed fuse and as the soldiers scramble for safety the spacecraft blows up.

Meanwhile, one of the saucer-men has an encounter with old man Larkin's bull. There is a wild battle between bull & troglodyte. The saucer-man stabs the bull with its syringe-like protrusions; the bull gores out the eye of the saucer-man, killing it.

Having been driven out of Larkin's house, Johnny & Jean return to their car where they observe an incomprehensible sight: several saucer-men hammering dents into the side of their car with a strange device! All they can think is that the things must hate the car for having killed their comrade!

the plot thickens

When the police investigate they find no little green man under the car but the body of Joe Gruen! Johnny & Jean go to Joe's buddy Art and tell him their story. He believes them. "The saucer-men framed you!" he says. "They made it look like you ran down Joe. C'mon!" And he grabs a gun.

Back at the kids' car, the vengeance-seeking hand of the dead space-man is hiding in the back seat. Art catches a glimpse of it as it scurries for cover. He tries to find it with a flashlight. When the light falls on it an amazing thing happens: It curls up in a puff of smoke!

Suddenly the remaining saucer-men surround them, hypodermic fingers bared. Art shoots but to no effect. The creatures are vegetable-like with veins of wood alcohol!

Art gets an idea: shines the car's lamp at the things. They shriek, shield their eyes, run.

But then the battery gives out! The things return, jump on Art. Johnny & Jean run for help, rounding up a bunch of teenagers at nearby Lovers Point. They rush in their cars to the place where the saucer-men are menacing Art. Surrounding the creatures in their unlit cars, at a signal from Johnny they all throw on their brights.

A flood of lights. A spiral of smoke. The Martians are no more.

The picture ends with a book closing on "The End"—but the hand holding it is a claw with an eye on it! And on the back cover the book reads: "The End—Until Next Time".

Two "Martians" sit down on the set of SAUCERMEN to take a "water break". (Water is very scarce on Mars and more sought after than coffee.)

From MONSTER ON THE CAMPUS, Universal 1958. Girls at college expect to meet wolves, yea, but this is ridiculous!

Little did Poe know when he wrote "Murders in the Rue Morgue" that one day (in 1932) Universal would film it. Here Erik the ape is doing the bidding of his off-scene master, Dr. Miracle (Bela Lugosi). Nice bidding, if you can get it!

LA MARCA DEL MUERTO don't look much like sticks!

The printer must have made an error.

The editor probably wrote "chicks".

Anyway, these hot tamales from south of the border are not getting a chance to cool off as they are carried off by monsters who are scarcely any improvement over the American variety.

seven, eight, "don't be afraid"

"Don't be afraid!"

That was alright when Bela said it, you knew all he wanted to do was take a little bite of you and turn you into a vampire.

But when a monster appears on the campus, or an ape ambles into the Rue Morgue, that's a different story—and one that could lead to mayhem or murder.

Girl goes limp as a tree goes out on a limb and lumbers off with her in Allied Artists' 1957 production of FROM HELL IT CAME.

The wolfman says: "Anyhow, in my line of busi-

The 3-eyed mutant says: "I don't mind carrying a girl like this home to mother—but I wouldn't want to marry her. A freak with only two eyes?"

The Mole man: "Dig this crazy fainting female;
she acts like she never saw a mole on a man's face before!"

RRORSVILLE... HEADLINES FROM

CLAUDE RAINS—the original "Invisible Man"—is feeling much better now after having been hospitalized for 2 weeks for "tired blood".

Rains entered the hospital after 4 performances in "So Much of Earth, So Much of Heaven," in New Hope, Pa.

At that time, the Playhouse staff was besieged by calls from newspapermen both at the theater and at their homes. The London Times called the New Hope police chief at 4 a.m. for the phone number of the producer, the press agent & the general manager.

However, no one was at liberty to give out any info.

So when the producer got a call from a man who identified himself as Edward Brash, son-in-law of Rains, he was naturally dubious. The cautious producer told the caller: "Before I can reveal any information, I'll have to call you back to make certain the call is official."

The telephone number Brash gave turned out to be at Time Magazine, and they informed him that, yes, they did have a Mr. Brash working for them.

But he didn't wait for Brash to answer. He quickly hung-up the phone, not at all amused by the "obvious" trickery.

Hours after the entire theater staff had chuckled over the shrewdness of ambitious newsmen, however, the Theater Guild called the producer to say that Rains' daughter was in their office and wanted to know how he was.

Her name? Mrs. Edward Brash, whose husband, the producer learned, happened to be on the Time-Life staff!

* * *

"I STILL SAY something's fishy" Dept.: Rains may have been happy to hear that invisibility, which was a dream in 1933, today is quite a reality! At least, according to a New York magic shop, it is.

Displayed in their window is a large fish tank, labeled "African Invisible Fish." Pretty good crowds gather each day to view the "invisible fish" and seemingly go away satisfied. Some even borrow the owner's magnifying glass for a better look!

BLACKSTONE

Blackstone toured the States briefly in 1950 with BELA LUGOSI, appearing in the terror king's Horror & Magic Stage Show.

His best-known feat, perhaps, was the Hindu rope trick, in which a boy climbed a rope onstage and disappeared in a cloud of smoke while the rope fell to the floor.

It's believed that the secret of this amazing illusion went with him to the grave.

"THE ADDAMS FAMILY" is a new album recently released by RCA Victor. It's mainly a collection of light musical conceptions set to a swinging beat. "Morticia's Theme", done with orchestra & chorus, is a pretty melodic idea while such titles as "One Little, Two Little, Three Little Tombstones", "Hide and Go Shriek" & "The Anxiety Tango" suggest the overall humor in this set.

THE ORIGINAL Iron Maiden—a medieval torture device now only a toothless curiosity—is on her way from England to a museum in Switzerland run by the son of the creator of Sherlock Holmes.

The device was sold to a dealer acting for Adrian Donan Doyle, who paid 2,200 pounds ($6,150).

Originating in the German city of Nuremberg, the 8-foot-high Iron Maiden is a statue of a young girl split down the middle and hinged. The inside was once studded with spikes that have been removed.

It's believed the Iron Maiden's fangs were pulled by a previous owner, the late American publisher William Randolph Hearst (the mention of whose name used to draw Bronx cheers from Bela Lugosi, I hear.)

Adrian Doyle, 56, is setting up a medieval museum in Switzerland as a memorial to his father, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, of LOST WORLD fame.

DR. GOLDFOOT & THE BIKINI MACHINE, AIP's spoof comedy, got an enforced change of title for distribution in Great Britain where it became PROFESSOR G. & THE BIKINI MACHINE.

Two medical doctors, one in London, the other in Cheltenham, protested that since there are actually 3 Doctor Goldfoots in the world, the use of their name would be embarrassing.

AIP producers Jim Nicholson & Sam Arkoff agreed to switch the degree of the Goldfoot character played by Vincent Price from medical to philosophical to change their "doctor" to a "professor."

And while on the subject of GOLDFOOT, I might add—for the benefit of you eagle-eyes in the audience—that set designer Diana Heller resourcefully employed some past AIP props in order to keep production costs at a minimum.

The haunted mansion from THE HOUSE OF USHER was refurbished, and the title props from PIT & THE PENDULUM were dusted off for torture chamber sequences. Vincent Price, who starred in the 2 chillers, uses his old haunts to terrorize Dwayne Hickman for attempting to foil a plot to ensnare the world's richest men in traps baited with life-like female androids.

fear warning

For a week in advance all persons with weak hearts are given fair warning that the monsters are on their way, that they will make personal appearances 3 times on Saturday in conjunction with the greatest free outdoor Monster Show the world has ever known.

There are even contests & prizes—plenty of both!

Oddly enough, despite warnings, about 150 hardy souls would assemble for each pre-noon showing . . . about twice as many at the 1 & 3 o'clock shows.

A typical show goes something like this:

monsters on parade

Announcer: "Ladies & Gentlemen, welcome to the Monster Show, sponsored by the Don Post Studios, Universal Pictures & James Warren Publications.

"As many of you know, filmonsters are enjoying a fantastic popularity in the country. Also in the city. People are dying of fright who have never died before—and others are laughing themselves silly.

"A man in large part responsible for this wave of horror hysteria is the editor of FAMOUS MONSTERS OF FILMLAND & MONSTER WORLD and he's here with us today. Let's bring him on right now!"

Editor appears.

Announcer (startled by costume): "I know you write some pretty weird things but I've never seen an outfit like that. What's it from?"

Editor: "Obviously you've missed THE TIME TRAVELLERS."

Announcer: "Oh, so you're acting in movies now in addition to editing monster magazines?"

Editor: "Yes. My next part is in a picture called PLANET OF . . . BLOOD!"

Announcer (kidding): "Well, I'll bet that picture gets a good review in your magazine!"

Editor: "Are you kidding? I never go to pictures like that!"

Announcer: "I notice you're carrying with you that hope that you had in THE TIME TRAVELLERS, the one you used to 'get things squared away.' I've heard a lot of people were puzzled about that trick—I wonder if you could show us how it was done?"

Editor: "Well, it would be really difficult without the proper props. In the picture there was a rhodomagnetic vibration machine that helped make it possible. But—just possibly—I wonder if there's someone in the audience who can blow very hard? Young man—how about you? You look like you have a sturdy pair of lungs!"

Boy (or girl) steps forward from audience. While editor twirls the circle of metal, boy or girl blows on it and—suddenly! mysteriously!—the round metal turns into a square!

time. Who is your favorite?"

Editor: "Well, today it's that grand old man who's still going strong at 78—BORIS KARLOFF. From FRANKENSTEIN in 1931 to DIE, MONSTER, DIE now."

Announcer: "Well, how about a question for someone in the audience. You're the expert—can you think one up?"

Editor (not wishing to make the contest too difficult): "I wonder if anyone out there can tell me the name of the actress who played the bride of Frankenstein?"

Most everyone knows it was Elsa Lanchester and one lucky boy or girl gets a pass to the Wax Museum, where life-like models of Frankenstein, Dracula, Erik the Phantom, Vincent Price in HOUSE OF WAX and other horror greats are to be seen.

Announcer: "To the right & left of you are 10 monster masks from the Don Post Studios and made famous by Universal Studios. Right now, I'm going to introduce you to Don Post himself and his able assistant, Verne Langdon."

Both men appear to a loud round of applause. Each makes short speeches.

Then a volunteer is selected from the audience and while the program proceeds, Verne Langdon proceeds to turn a boy or girl into a monster. He explains how to affix a scar realistically, demonstrates how to apply blood, shows how a pre-formed rubber nose can start the transformation of a teenager into a teenage wolfman.

In the meantime the announcer has another contest. This one he conducts himself.

monster memories

"I wonder," says the emcee, "who considers himself a real expert out there on monsters?"

Eager show of hands.

"Alright, young man, step up here. Now on either side of me you see 10 famous monsters used in Universal Pictures. If you can identify and five of these masks I'll give you a brand new issue of FAMOUS MONSTERS or CREEPY. If you can identify all ten . . . I'll also give you an Addams Family record featuring Lurch."

Generally the contestant can get 5 right, such as Wolfman, Mummy, Dracula, Frankenstein & The Phantom.

Sometimes it is more difficult to name properly, as well: the Mad Doctor, Hunchback, Mr. Hyde, Mole Man, Creature from the Black Lagoon.

the terrible trio

Next, one at a time (as all at once would be too terrifying a fright), the emcee introduces—

The Wolfman—

The Mad Doctor—

And Mr. Hyde.

Each monster in turn scares the yell out of the audience.

A few, braver than the rest, want to shake the paw of the Wolfman or ask Mr. Hyde what became of Dr. Jekyll.

Then comes the Star of the Show.

With gray pasty face, bald head, missing tooth and scar-slashied face, Tor lumbers onto the scene like an elephant with elephantitis, scaring & delighting fans all over the place.

the monsters write again

Then, for the umpteenth time in their lives—or perhaps it's the skillionoth—the Wolfman, Tor, Mad Doctor, FM's editor & Mr. Hyde spend the next hour answering questions & signing autographs.

They sign everything from copies of FM & MW to Monster Calendars and fotos of themselves.

The editor wondered why one young fan kept coming back to him for autographs. "How come you want so many?" he asked. "Because," explained the little monster, "when I get 5 of yours I can trade them for 1 of Vincent Price!"

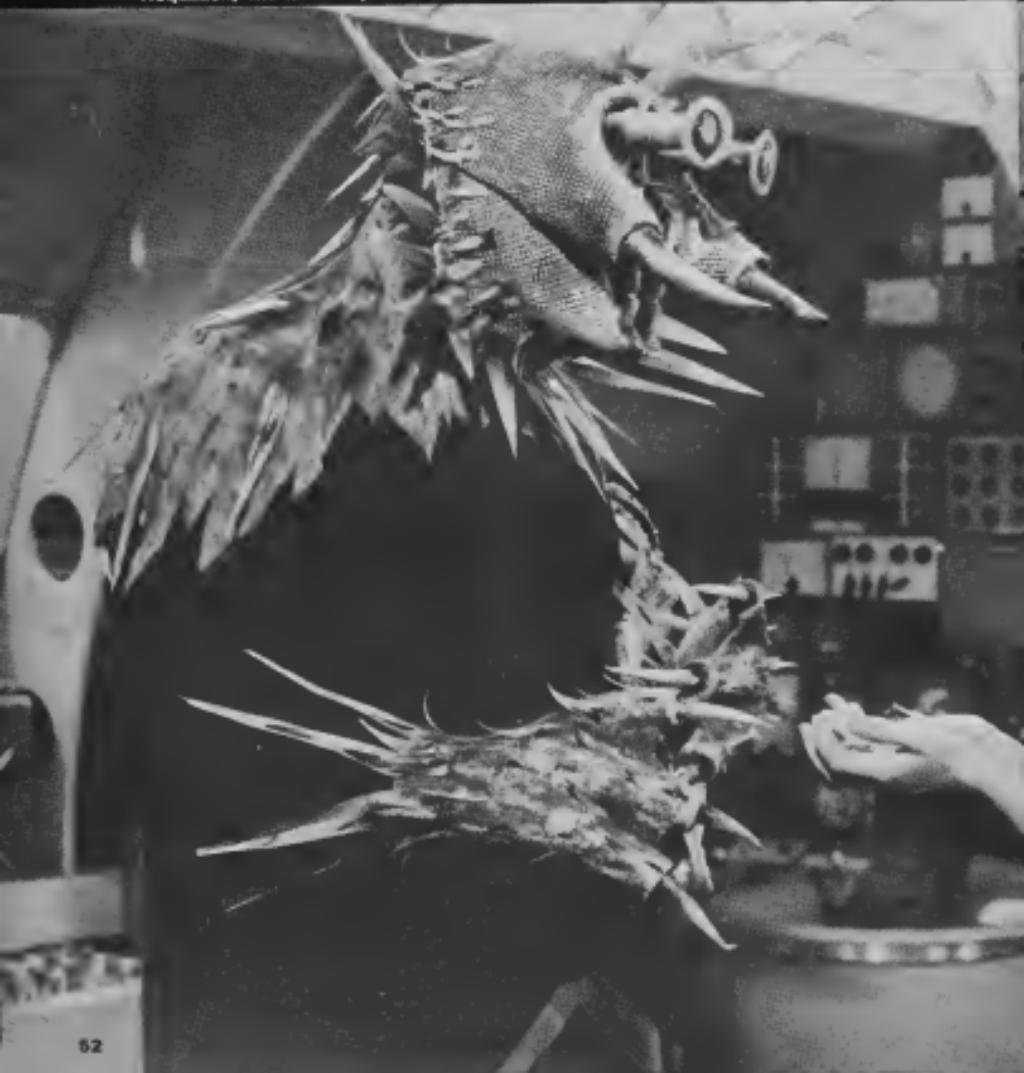

Many fans wanted to tug the Wolfman's beard to see if it was real. Tor Johnson, observing this, warned them: "If you do that too much he won't have any hair left on his chin. Would you believe it?—I used to have a full head of hair till souvenir hunters plucked it our hair by hair!"

If you live near a Unimart you might call up the Manager and ask him if the Monster Show is scheduled to appear at his store. If you're lucky maybe he won't have got the word yet from other mangled Managers that his store would never be the same if the monsters invade it!

"Who can save them?"

first dracula—then daleks!

It had been 13 years since Bela Lugosi had invaded England, since Count Dracula had swooped down on the unsuspecting populace and sent them scurrying in search of wolfsbane & wooden stakes. Now their lives were at stake once again.

When I visited London last September, to meet Boris Karloff & Christopher Lee, have dinner with Ray Harryhausen, attend the World Science Fiction Convention, etc., I found that hundreds of thousands of British boys & girls were in a statement of fever & ferment.

Almost, you might say, panic.

No, not over the Beatles—

Over the Daleks!

the metal monsters

First off, how to pronounce Daleks: exactly like Doll X.

Second off, what are Daleks?

No one knows, exactly.

They may be horrible slug-like creatures like HG Wells' super-intelligences from Mars in "The War of the Worlds".

They could be huge hairy fuzzy frightening spider shapes.

They could be apes with 3 eyes and 4 arms!

Whatever they are, they are encased in mobile metal machines, with scanning eyes, suction graspers, death-ray tubes.

From somewhere inside them' strange hollow electronic voices emanate, as tho from an echo-box.

They are as colorful as juke boxes or pinball machines but don't let their myriad rainbow colors deceive you—they're deadly dangerous.

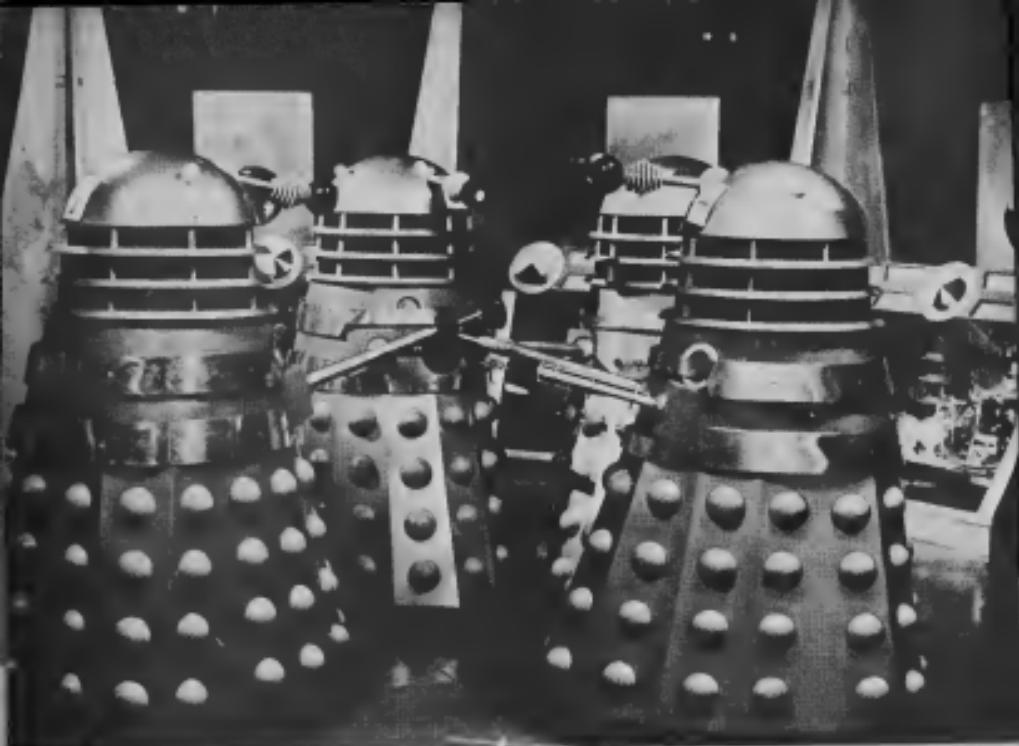

And they hold a great portion of England in thrall, young & old alike: children and grown men & women—an estimated 9 million of them.

9 million captives of the cathode tube!

9 million viewers who never miss an episode of DR. WHO (And The Daleks) when they are on TV.

hypnotic spell

The plain fact is, the Daleks have got the English tele-viewers in a mesmeric state.

The dread Daleks, more than Gog-like automations: horrible creatures inhabit these mobile & lethal machines from another world.

They are like flies, captive in a spider's web. The only difference is, whereas flies dread the spider and know they are already dead, the "victims" of the Daleks come alive every time their favorite foes make another public appearance!

Dr. Who, son of Dr. Fu?

You've heard of Dr. No. Seen Fu Machu.

Now comes Dr. Who.

But he, unlike the villainous would-be world conquerors, he is a good doctor.

A little mad, perhaps; absentminded, at least. But not bad.

And he travels thru Time & Space in his incredible invention, the Tardis.

When I was in England I was told—by a 10-year-old fan—what T.A.R.D.I.S. stands for. Like The Man from U.N.C.L.E., each initial stands for something. But now that I'm safely 6000 miles away from the Daleks, I'm darned if I can remember what the letters stood for!

I think it was something like Temporal And Radial Disintegrator-Integrator System.

Or Time And Relativity Dimensional Integrator Selector.

Something like that.

Anyway, its effect is to whisk Dr. Who—and the watcher's too—whee & away from the here & now to other worlds & other whens.

things from outer space

There've been a long line of cosmic creatures menacing Dr. Who & his crew.

Zorbius!

Remember THEM?

Well, these giant ants would frighten the pants off even those formidable formic-creatures in THEM.

A Zarbi is a huge upright ant-like creature (the only thing missing is ant-ennae) that might be what would appear in an ant's nightmare if ants have dreams.

Koquillion!

Almost impossible to describe.

Fortunately, we have a foto—snuggled in from the planet Dido. A good picture is said to be worth 10,000 words, so we'll add only a very few more to say that it's the prickliest spindiest monster you ever saw, all quills & pointy things, with a pair of popping eyes that would have made Popeye the Sailor Man green with envy. The eyes, in fact, resemble very much those of snails. Stalk-eyes.

How Koquillions fall in love it would be difficult to imagine as it would appear that if one attempted to kiss another they would wind up with faces looking like shredded wheat.

But considering how bad Koquillions are, perhaps they never fall in love, they only fall in hate.

Beware the planet Vortis, unless you want to become a man-sandwich for a hungry Zarbill!

FAMOUS MONSTERS OF FILM #7

At the mercy of a machine-thing from outer space is Ann Davis in the final episode of "Dalek Invasion of Earth".

exciting adventure

A friend of mine in England, Joan Lomax, has a young son who is a typical Dalek-devotee, and from him I learned the story of Dr. Who & The Rescue.

Part 1 was called "The Powerful Enemy".

Dr. Who & his young friends Ian & Barbara land on the planet Dido.

The space-traveling professor has been on Dido before and remembers it as a friendly planet. He is astonished, therefore, to find the lives of his party in immediate danger upon landing!

Exploration reveals a crashed rocketship from Earth with 2 survivors: a man named Bennett, a young girl named Vicki. They tell of Koquillion the terrible, a member of the native population who is keeping them prisoner.

The only hope for all of them is a rescue craft from Earth.

Will it arrive in time?

Unfortunately, I had to leave England before I learned the outcome of the final episode.

another cliffhanger

I didn't learn his age but there was a little boy named Billy Temple in a Zorro outfit who told me a bit about another episode called "Flashpoint".

This time it seems Dr. Who & his fellow travelers had voyaged not in space but thru time . . . to the year 2164.

The Tardis materializes in London of the 22d Century to discover that the Earth has been invaded by the Daleks who have come to our planet to burrow thru the center and steal our magnetic core! (Rotten to the core, I'd say.)

Altho resistance groups do exist: intrepid bands of guerrilla warfare underground fighters; they are virtually powerless against the Dalek humanoids with their superior war machines that patrol the streets of stricken London.

To say nothing of the flying saucers that swoop from the skies above.

journey into fear

"The bosses of the British Broadcasting Corporation," our British correspondent Peter Jarman told me, "realizing early on that they had a hit on their hands with the Dr. Who Series, decided they must have a fresh batch of beasties to Carry On the bad work."

So writer Bill Strutton & designer John Wood were called into a conference. "More monsters!" said the men-in-charge.

Kogullon—"The Powerful Enemy"! One close-up is enough to convince us!

FAMOUS MONSTERS OF FILMLAND

Friendly butterfly-men of "The Web Planet" Vortis. But beware the Zarbies, worse than Zombies!

Strutton promptly went home and started browsing thru his Encyclopaedia Britannica. Giant ants & butterflies came to mind.

Butterflies being gentle creatures, he patterned the peaceful Menoptera after them.

The menacing ant-like monsters became the Zarbies. Actually, he gives credit to his wife for coming up with the scary-sounding name.

The designer Wood had the job of building the ant-men. Fibre glass, leather & a substance called perspex went into their creation. The first one created cost nearly $1000. It turned, Shaun Usher told me, "sweating actors into human lobsters."

The Zarbies were immediately put to dirty work in an episode where Dr. Who (played by Wm. Hartnell) landed on a sci-fi type planet equipped with such creature comforts as acid pools, death-splitting grubs and of course the meek Menoptera & the vicious Zarbies.

the Wood work

Designer Wood gave journalist Shaun Usher some interesting insights about his work.

"The assignments are exciting & stimulating," he said. "The only limits in science fiction are those of ingenuity.

"I'm a married man with 2 young sons and I try out some of my new ideas on my family. David, who's a schoolboy, was a bit upset at first by the Daleks but his brother Dawson was a keen fan from the first. When I took them to the studio to see how Daleks were made, David became a bit happier; both boys lost their awe once they touched the machines and realized they were just ordinary materials like hardboard & plastic."

But don't you touch a Dalek if you meet up with one—it might be real and not just a studio prop!

CHAPTER 17

THE YMIK'S LAST STAND

But the creature was displaying a skill and ferocity they never knew it possessed. Despite the time-worn smoothness of the concrete, despite the height of the wall, it put out its claws and gripped the old stones. It clung desperately and began to move upwards. Before another bazooka missile could be launched it had scaled the wall and was hoisting itself over.

"But this time, the escape route wasn't clear."

Outside the amphitheatre, a ring of weapons were awaiting the bigs from Vennix, ready to fire.

"There it is!" McIntosh cried as the ugly dragon's head appeared over the rim of the arena.

Contino waved his arm frantically at the tank commander behind him. The tank turret began to revolve, aiming the long nose of the cannon towards the awesome head. The shell exploded out of its mouth, heading dead-on for the creature on the Colosseum wall.

The creature was hit.

It staggered backwards, scraped its talons on the stone to hold its position, and managed to prevent a fall.

Inside the arena, Col. Calder raised his bazooka once more.

The shot caught the creature squarely. It screamed in anguish and in dreadful realization, just as the tank outside fired its second shell. The ancient wall of the Colosseum crumpled under the bombardment and debris and creature tumbled into the arena.

Calder looked at the dead beast, and the rigidity of his features suddenly disappeared. His mouth drooped in weariness and relief, and his shoulders slumped.

Then he turned and walked to the entrance, not looking back.

Dr. Ual looked after him, not saying anything. Then he followed the others into the arena, to gaze at the dead creature lying in the rubble of ancient stones.

He looked at the beast and his voice was sad.

"Why is it always—always so costly—for man to move from the present to the future?"

MAX

THE MONSTER

is he the maximum utmost in monsters?

herculean effort

Siegfried's unforgettable dragon was built 2 generations ago by the Germans.

Now the Italians have come up with a sea-creature of similar huge proportions & complexity to man-eat Tarzan. Correction: ex-Tarzan, Gordon Scott, now known as Hercules.

Bug-eyed, multi-limbed, long-tentacled, "Max" (as he was affectionately dubbed by cast & crew during filming) is a steel & plastic monster measuring 25' from snout to tail.

Snaking around on his insides are 10 miles of wire.

It takes an electronic system as intricate as an IBM computer to power the 6 large engines that make Max look alive. He's operated by 2 electronics experts who manipulate his movements from afar via remote control transistor radios.

You can have a duplicate of Max yourself for only $25,000. (Ask Dad for one for your next birthday—in case you don't want to live that long.)

his debut. Here's the story:

An ancient Greek pirate ship, cruising the Aegean Sea, comes on a large 2-masted vessel and moves in to attack. As the ship draws closer, the pirate master sees the golden shield with the letter "H", identifying it as Hercules' ship, the Olympia. He orders his men back but it is too late.

The Olympia swiftly reaches her enemy and Hercules (Gordon Scott), aided by Diogenes & Ulysses, leads the fight. The pirates are all killed or cast adrift. Hercules frees the prisoners.

The captives explain that they fled their native Troy because a sea-monster had been terrorizing the city. Each month the citizens offered it a young girl. Unwilling to lose their own daughters, the prisoners left Troy. Hercules promises to save the city from the monster.

In Troy, preparations for another human sacrifice are underway. A young girl is chained to Neptune's rock and, by tradition, a warrior attempts to save her by frightening off the monster. As the waves churn to foam a bizarre crab-like creature emerges. Max, a youth, Ortak, attacks it with his spear but his raft is overturned.

Hercules asks Petra's permission to kill the sea monster and reveals that Ortak is alive, on board ship. Petra is oddly reluctant to accept Hercules' offer.

Preparations for the battle with one monster proceed. Diogenes works out a formula which burns on contact with water. They plan to use this to drive the sea-monster to land where he will be more vulnerable to attack.

On the eve of the monthly sacrifice, Hercules and Ulysses try out the 2 invulnerable horses given to the city by Minerva. In a countryside grotto, they are ambushed. Hercules uses his enormous strength to pull down a supporting column and part of the grotto ceiling falls, killing the attackers.

The ambush confirms Diogenes' suspicions. He has uncovered evidence that Petra planned the death of Princess Diana's father and now wants to dispose of her to have the throne for himself.

dove. As they release the birds, all fly away except Diana's! The Gods have spoken.

Hercules, suspecting foul play, charges Petra with treachery. Leaving, Hercules observes a shadow of a man and pursues it. Steel gratings fall behind him, forcing him into a circular room. The exit is blocked by a stone partition and a heavy steel net falls around him. Despite his superstrength, Hercules cannot withstand the assault of Petra's soldiers who club him unconscious.

In a forest clearing, 5 soldiers guard a pit in which Hercules lies. When he attempts to scale the wall the guards pour oil down the sides of the trap, preventing his escape. Orttag arrives and enables Hercules to climb to safety.

Ulysses, Diogenes & their group gallop down to the beach as the sea-monster appears. Shouting and throwing rocks they drive the beast into shallow water. They spread Diogenes' inflammable liquid on the water, cutting the monster off by a wall of flame. As it moves toward Diana, who is chained to the sacrificial rock, Hercules & Orttag arrive on shore. In the confusion, Petra is dragged along by Orttag's horse and thrown into the fire.

Ortag discovers, too late, that their horses are not the invulnerable ones they were promised. His mount falls and he is crushed in the monster's pincers. Hercules leaps to the ground and attacks the beast with his sword.

In a terrific battle, Hercules drives his weapon thru the creature's exposed leg and kills it. He then frees Diana as Ulysses vanquishes the last of Petra's soldiers.

MONSTER MAIL CALL

Press this issue to TOM MULAN of Monicello, Ill., JOHN BRUNNIS, Cliffside Park, N.J., and PAUL & LAURIE BROOKS of Los Angeles, for the most helpful letters, actions and/or contributions since the last issue.

DEDICATION: This issue is gratefully dedicated to MRS. LORRAINE BURROICK for her wonderful cooperation the past several years in helping to keep FAMOUS MONSTERS famous.

WORRIED FAN

Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi, The Chaney, Claude Rains, Basil Rathbone, Names sound familiar? Of course they do! These men of horror films have given a priceless heritage to those who now exist, describing themselves as monster fans.

It is a large deep heritage it is the heritage of watching a horror film and recognizing it as an art & science of the screen because & accomplishment because of that role & endeavor to perform at perfection.

As of late, these actors are compared with new thespians who are billed as horror actors. Their films are said to be on the level with recent "bonanzas" by 9 & 10 year old "critics". The animation masterpieces of O'Brien & Harryhausen are ridiculed and set aside for low cost wheretofore by newer & older fans alike. These things make me ask myself, "What is the world of horror films, actors & fans coming to?"

FAIRMONT MONSTERS is a wonderful & exciting magazine. Its objective & comprehensive reviewing by a great editor & staff, plus its magnificent choices of filmbooks, never ceases to be a source of delight for me.

EDWIN LUCAS
Seattle, Wash.

* Ed, we obviously both read the same monster magazine yet you have somehow come up with a different set of conclusions from my own. From all the letters from readers I have published in the past 8 years, plus perhaps 25 more for every one printed, and from all the opinions I gathered when I took the 8700 mile drive back & forth across the USA meeting filmfans here every rule & day for 5 weeks; I have the very definite impression that young & old fans alike are at the very least indifferent to the majority of modern monsters. If not downright antagonistic. I know of practically no one who preferred GOOSEBILLY to KING KONG, the second LOST WORLD to the first, the second CALIGARI to the first CABINET. No one ever praises Christopher Lee's monster over the Frankenstein or Boris Karloff, the exception to the rule being Lee's GRACIAS which seems, if you'll pardon the expression, to run neck & neck with Lugosi's. The Golden Age of fantastic films, when we had the best of Chaney, Karloff, Lon Chaney, Browning, Whaley, Pierce, Lugosi, etc., was from 1928 thru 1936 the University 13 years! I have the distinct feeling that most serious monster movie fans of the 60s have been disappointed with the quality of the mass quantity of horror films which they have been offered. Only the names of Christopher Lee, Jimmy Sangster, Ray Harryhausen, Charles Beaumont & a very few others command much respect among these supporters of fantastic films who have set a high standard. I know of 2 outstanding personalities in this country whose acting abilities could considerably enhance any fanciful film of the macabre. Fritz Leiber & Theodore Gottlieb. If any of your readers want to do yourselves a favor, write a letter to your favorite studio (such as American-International, 7185 Sunset Blvd., Hollywood, Calif. 90046, Han-

Two girls & I have a monster club here

RUTH BABBY Charlotte, N.C.

TERRI-DACTYL FLIES AGAIN

Mrs. Terri Pincus in her article in your 35th issue said monsters were good for her 4 children and for all children in general. The point is not that they are good or bad but that there are better things such as the great works of William Shakespeare or the paintings of Leonardo da Vinci (Follow that argument to its logical conclusion and 99% of the writers & painters of the world might as well turn to their typewriters & paint brushes!) You mentioned something about 8 to 10 year old monster fans... don't you think 10 is a ridiculous age to be interested in monsters? (Frankly, no.) Sodden is just 2 years away from college. However, monsters in different forms and all sorts of life which everyone must face for they are something you can't stop from happening. I like monsters but I do not encourage them. My mother doesn't like them as much as I do. My mother & I read your article and discussed it. We have decided that if I get a copy of FM I may keep it for a month and then pass it on to a friend. Okay, we like that idea. We wish of their presence in it. These films are made to shock & frighten but serious monster fans marvel at and delight with watching the aforementioned & a score of others in the old school of horror actors. They were helped by other great men like Bram Stoker & Tod Browning, who drove & sweated & forged together literary & technical masterpieces. Their names went up in big letters & lights, yes, not because they wanted them there but because they worked hard & earnestly at a great profession & art and enjoyed success.

LIKED LIU-GOSI FEATURE

What a beautifully written story. What a marvel of story editing & compiling. You should receive an award for the fine presentation of events & happenings in the life of Beta Lugosi in England. It was a realistic, intelligent, interesting & compelling story of one of Hollywood's & horrorfilm's world-famous citizens.

Credits must be shared with Alex Gordon, the producer, who made the wealth of newspaper clippings from England available to us the anonymous British reporters who wrote up the many original interviews and G. John Edwards who did an A+ job of following editorial instructions in selecting & arranging the material. No one person deserves all the praise but I thank you on behalf of those who contributed to your satisfaction.)

Our whole family reads your magazines every month and always thinks well of them but this time you have surpassed yourselves.

To say that someone in your personnel has finally presented a different & intelligent story about a greatly underestimated man, is enough. You beautifully showed Beta Lugosi to be a real, considerate, charming & adorable man. It was a great change & improvement a success... and such a success.

A special tribute to you for showing us the real instead of the rest, Beta Lugosi.

MORE SCREENING COMPLIMENTS

In the Jekyll-Hyde coverage the inclusion of the little-known facts about the story's creation & development made the high point of the issue and the simple story outline served well to renew the plot in my mind. Of particular interest to me was the wonderfully complete checklist of J&H, with almost twice as much information as the April '61 copy. Please try to include similar chronologies of other movies in future issues. The value of this as a reference was in itself worth the price of the magazine.

My congratulations also to Mr. Brown for his list of those who are "no longer with us" (in the flesh). It was both interesting & informative.

CRIME & PUNISHMENT

Even though monsters are just about 'tin' these days we still almost have to sneak away from the newsstands with our favorite mag. (Have you ever considered paying for it?) We often discussed this problem with sympathetic friends and teachers and all seem to agree on one thing—the awful puns under the photos create a bad impression. It may not solve all our problems, but it certainly would help in showing that these magazines can be serious and mature, if this practice was completely discontinued in FM & MM and we could be treated to interesting info such as you used for the pictures in your great KING KONG & METROPOLIS in SPACE-MEN! articles.

AUGUST RAPOSA
Anaheim, Calif.

* But the KING KONG issues didn't sell as well as the publisher had expected—and SPACEMEN didn't sell at all. Far more serious & "respectable" than FM, SM was a disappointing financial failure and had to be discontinued. Also, see next letter.

AND WE THOUGHT ALL GORDONS (BERT, ALEX, RUTH, RICHARD, FLASH) WERE NICE GUYS!

FM fell flat on its face at the start. After 21 issues it picked itself up and became a positively magnificent magazine. Then after 6 short issues, it happened, it just slid down hill and shattered into a pile of garbage. Something happened in the short time between issues 27 & 28. Something horrible. I damn what but I sure ruined the mag. The editorials became a stale collection of old jokes. The tiny print disappeared. The articles cheapened. The paper changed. The writing sank. I have absolutely no praise for FM now. It stinks. It is absolute junk. Horrible.

Candid Foto of The Editor
While Reading This Letter

BRUCE GORDON
Fullerton, Calif.

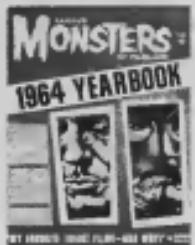

* The badder we get, the better we sell. Proving people will collect anything. Consider there are even garbage collectors!

BORIS KARLOFF, FRANKENSTEIN HIMSELF TELLS YOU: "TALES OF MYSTERY & IMAGINATION"

BORIS KARLOFF TALES OF MYSTERY & IMAGINATION

An Original Story Reader by Boris Karloff
Illustrations by Edward S. Ormsby

Only as Karloff can tell it... "THE LEGEND OF SLEEPY HOLLOW" and "RIP VAN WINKLE". A brand new mood by the master story-teller of horror and mystery. In all the frightening powers of his voice with the chilling background of special sound effects, you live the great classic horror tales of the headless horseman, the hoof-beats of the horse, the howling of the wind as it whips the robe around a rider without a head. The night lives with terror and you sit in your room and hear the sounds and maybe if you look out your window, you'll catch a fast look at the right rider who roars the countryside. Only $1.98.

DROP DEAD

On very Wednesday night in the late 1920's and early 1930's, when radio was brand new, there was a radio show about a house and the radio was turned on in a north Woods radio receiver called "LIGHTS OUT", directed by Artie Shaber, whose special talent caused the word "radio" of all radio sets to be called "radio" radio stations. Here is a sampler of the process of humor and suspense that has never been matched.

A COMPLETE COLLECTION OF HORROR & MONSTER MOVIES

The BRIDE OF FRANKENSTEIN

FRANKENSTEIN'S bride! Boris Karloff wants to marry Elsa Lanchester. Nothing like that in the monster movies... not even the fact she is 7-foot tall, is wrapped in gauze gowns... and has jagged fangs... and her raggedy glasses around her neck. A classic film every collector should own! 100 min., 100 feet, $5.75.

FRANKENSTEIN MEETS THE WOLFMAN

WHO COMES OUT ON TOP? Frankenstein or Wolfman? We won't give it away, but here is a 2-Monster Movie that doubles your fun as you watch the world's恶est adversaries fight it out for the title. Mezzine... Showcasing a full set of art and cards for Monster Movie collectors. 80 min., 100 feet, $5.75.

THE REVENGE OF FRANKENSTEIN

SUPERNATURAL TECHNICOLOR!

FRANKENSTEIN GETS EVEN! "Revenge" makes this the scariest monster movie ever made. The Doctor Who... gives an unforgettable performance. The dark, dark mood of this film is not for the light-hearted. Full of fight and night, it's a just right for you movie. Film noirish, this movie is both black & white or supernatural. Technicolor! This slim film is a full 100 min. black & white, $5.95. Technicolor, $12.45.

WAR OF THE PLANETS

WHAT HAPPENS when a runaway planet plays hooky from outer space? Another universe ends in a space scientist to stop exploding meteors, and trouble in the skies. This is a truly wonderful space-and-science film... and one you won't ever forget. So get it today! Slim, 100 feet, $5.75.

ABBOTT & COSTELLO MEET DR. JEKYLL & HYDE

AMERICA'S MOST HILARIOUS COMEDIANS meet the world's most monstrous Monsters... and that's where the fun begins! Abbott & Costello drag poor Mr. Hyde into a monster. Everything goes crazy and Scotland yard goes mad. Monsters can be fun, and this film is the funniest! Slim, 100 feet, $5.75.

ABBOTT & COSTELLO IN ROCKET & ROLL

THE FUNNIEST COMICS in Hollywood double up for a crazy rocket trip through outer space. Beau and Lou come to Venus and back again. THE WAR OF THE WORLDS

THE WAR of the WORLDS

By H. G. WELLS

THREE MONTHS ago H. G. Wells' "The War of the Worlds" was published. Early discussions of the fight between Earth & Mars, the Martians' methods of warfare, their aims and strange "monsters" developing on Mars, a steady seller now.

Frankenstein

By MARY SHELLEY

FRANKENSTEIN

By MARY SHELLEY

JOHN ROBERT WALTON
stars in this classic film. He is angry at people who are treating him like a dog. His master goes by the name of Frankenstein and makes him and more into a monster. He will get even and satisfy his desire for revenge. This is the continuation of the entire Frankenstein story, a classic to Mary Shelley's original. It belongs to every literate library.

Dr. Jekyll & Mr. Hyde

DR. JEKYLL & MR. HYDE

By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON

STEVENSON wrote this while living in a room right across from a public house. It reflects the mysterious, excitable nature that sometimes made him seem a maniac. Paul Draper, the hero, will refresh the original version by Robert Louis Stevenson. Stevenson's original work, with illustrations, can be considered to be a very famous classic. Now available in paperback.

THE INVISIBLE MAN

By H. G. WELLS

THE INVISIBLE MAN

WILLIAM BLAKE stars in this Invisible Man who walks like no man in Europe and does strange and mysterious deeds of government! Is he a spy, a criminal, a mad scientist or what? You'll have to guess and guess again from read to tell! The answer to these questions is "The Invisible Man." This is the original version, the first edition, by H. G. Wells. It is a true classic of all time.

PICTURE of DORIAN GRAY

By OSCAR WILDE

DAM IN PAPERBACK. One of the great "classics." Very young and handsome for years, while a portrait of himself grows old. Oscar Wilde said if could this as permanent classic were ever to disappear, it would be a disgrace to the world that civilized men will show them, even to your own generation. This is the original, the first edition, by Oscar Wilde. It will live forever as one of the all-time classics of literature.
